1. By saying that culture is all encompassing, anthropologists refer to the fact that culture is the main explanation behind the behavior of humankind. Since their childhood, every person gets to learn of some behaviors from the surroundings. Some behaviors reinforced by some positive stimuli are perceived as the most desirable ones, and such traits are observed as the best. On the other hand, society condemns and punishes some behaviors. Punishable behaviors are perceived as bad traits. In the end, an average person becomes more or less a product of behaviors learned over time. Various behaviors and the associated punishments or rewards define what people call cultures. Cultures result in natural or instinctive drives to adapt and conform to the well being of a larger society. In fact, culture defines the way humans think, act, and react to changes.

2. Using traditional medicine comes with some advantages and disadvantages. One of the advantages is that patients can access medication at the most reasonable costs. Most of the traditional doctors do not incur much cost to make medicines, and in most cases, they use locally available products from herbs and other sources. Secondly, traditional medicine is quite effective when it comes to the treatment of chronic illnesses, because people have always trusted traditional treatment methods since the times when hospitals were not popular. However, traditional medicine lacks dosage instructions, and thus, it may be quite dangerous in case one takes in an overdose. The medication carries along with it the risk of poisoning.

Western medicine refers to medicines that have their roots from western civilization, whereas scientific medicine is a term commonly used to refer to the modern form of medicine. The medication traces its origin from the synthesis of the Flexnerian medical teaching reforms together with the Germ theory of disease. First, scientific medicine is advantageous, because it comes with a clearly outlined prescription that guides patients. Secondly, scientific medicine is suitable for the treatment of a wide array of diseases. Unfortunately, this kind of medicine is quite expensive, especially when it comes to cases of acute illnesses.

3. Hypodescent is a term used to refer to children of mixed union that are directed or associated with the subordinate group. The term owes its origin to the numerous historical American colonies. The practice results in the “one drop rule”, which refers to the fact that any individual associated with black ancestry definitely qualifies as a black. As it has always been the case, racial segregation has cropped up over time and eventually led to great animosity among the citizens of the United States.

4. A nuclear family is a union comprising of a father, mother, and their children. The universality of a family has more to do with how it is defined. Murdock takes the standpoint that a family is actually a social unit characterized by such aspects as common residence, economic co-operation, and reproduction. In this definition, there must be a representation of adults from both sexes. The main evidence that backs up this line of argument is the fact that basic biological need continues to be fulfilled even in the present.

5. In the classes attended, the concept of hypodescent sparks many reflections in any learner’s mind. Learning about its genesis opens a person’s mind to reflect about the experiences of couples right from union. The concept about the life after union to its current situation where the effects are constantly felt leaves the learner with the urge to seek solutions to the challenges. The best solution depends on the United States and the rest of the world to embrace love. Love is the surest way for the world to develop the unity of purpose and economic empowerment.
