Delete Dress Codes

High School dress codes do not make any sense to me. I have heard all the reasons that justify their existence. One of the reasons is that too many kids wear gang clothes and some get attacked or even killed. Another reason is that parents have to put up too much money, and even then, kids without parents with deep pockets cannot compete. There are also those that say kids behave badly when they dress in a free spirit way. Let us take them one at a time. As for the gang stuff, it is mainly how one acts and not how one looks. If the gang stuff is still a problem, then ban certain items of clothing that contribute to the nuisance. You do not have to go to the extremes of introducing uniforms. Just change the attitude, not clothes. Then there is the money angle. Let the kids get a part-time job, if they want better clothes. The behavior number is not what I can relate to. I mean, you go to class and learn, and you do it the school way, but the way you dress should have something to do with how you want to express yourself. Do they want to turn kids into a bunch of little robots that think the same way, behave the same way, and yes with the dress code even look the same? Get real! They should cut us some slack with how we dress. They will be happier capers in classroom, and later, better citizens in the society.

Success in Education

Success in education comes out of careful planning. Students must have strong organization skills to maximize the chances of benefiting from their school time. Successful students have schedules that guide them in their learning activities. Adhering to a learning schedule requires great self-discipline. Unfortunately, most students do not have self-discipline; hence, they waste a lot of time in non-academic activities. A good student should have a date book that lists every single appointment, class time, deadlines, and all the tests. The student should also find out all the activities that are scheduled for the whole semester. Having a bird's eye view of all activities helps one stay balanced and avoid surprises. Students have to plan for their tests ahead of time instead of waiting for deadlines then get involved in crash sittings. Students should be wise in choosing friends. Having smart friends that offer academic support pushes one to success. Peer pressure is very powerful; hence students need not to fall for negative peer pressure. Smart friends will support one's desire to be successful in school. Spending time with friends who have a similar goal of success will help one soar in academics. One should limit the time they spend with friends who are not helpful in education. A student who is headed for success is open to feedback. Feedback is an important tool of gauging ones advancement. Feedback is a gift hence one should not be defensive if they are criticized. Feedback enables one to discard ideas that do not make sense while embracing positive ideas. Any information that one is given has some value. It is, therefore, important to let the information seep into the mind and then make a decision on how it would be helpful. A good plan, smart friends, and being open to feedback are important ingredients of success in education.
