Dreams Come True

Dreams Come True is one of the leading organizations offering charitable services to children suffering from life-threatening illnesses especially within Northeast Florida or Southeast Georgia. Over the years, the organization has fulfilled over 3,000 dreams of different children within the mentioned areas. The organization also offers grants to these children to support their education and healthcare, as some of the children come from families that are unable to support their special needs. The organization was established in 1984 to ensure that every child can enjoy his or her childhood regardless of any illnesses suffered, which may hinder effective childhood development (Dreams Come True, 2014). The grants offered by the organization are for children from the age of two and a half to young adults of eighteen years. The Dreams Come True organization's vision is to contribute to the society by committing itself to childhood contribution.

The first factor influencing the social responsibility for Dreams Come True is the increasing number of children suffering from life-threatening conditions, such as cancer and HIV/AIDS. The organization provides them with an opportunity to integrate with other members of American society, which will play a vital role towards ensuring that they achieve a higher development rate. The organization plans to expand to other areas in the United States, as this will provide an opportunity for millions of children suffering from life-threatening conditions (Lane & Mason, 2014). Secondly, the increased stigmatization of children suffering from these conditions also stimulates the organization towards offering its services. In most cases, children suffering from cancer and other conditions suffer from stigmatization from other members of their community, which becomes a hindrance in future interactions. Consequently, the organization intends to ensure that children are treated equally and fairly without favor.

The Dreams Come True organization has several social initiatives. Firstly, the organization supports over 4,000 charity events annually with the aim of educating individuals on the need to embrace diversity. Embracing diversity is important, as it ensures that children receive fair treatment regardless of their conditions (Whiting, 2014). Additionally, embracing diversity also provides adequate opportunities to these children in terms of education and health care. In most cases, children suffering from life-threatening conditions face rejection especially by family members, which affects their motivation towards other individuals in society. Secondly, the organization also offers economic empowerment for families with children suffering from these conditions. Providing them with economic empowerment gives them an opportunity to ensure that they can provide for their children adequately. Dreams Come True provides education to these families and later provides them with grants, such as startup capital for business ventures.

The social initiatives implemented by the organization have several ethical effects. Firstly, the initiatives create a platform for equality, which is a lacking factor in most societies today. Dreams Come True establishes a base for equality through ensuring that children who suffer from life-threatening conditions receive the same level and quality of treatment as others within the same society (Dreams Come True, 2014). Secondly, the initiatives also provide livelihoods for families with children suffering from life-threatening conditions. The provision of livelihoods is important towards ensuring that these families can provide for their families. Thirdly, the initiatives also act as a source of knowledge for other members of the society, as the organization provides individuals with adequate information relating to these conditions and effective treatment plans.
